	EPA's Office of International and Tribal Affairs (OITA) to participate in this project since he has a unique set of skills. This project is tied to a priority UNEP/UNIDO mercury treaty negotiation work with China. Furthermore, this VCM activity is one of the top priorities for EPA and the UNEP/UNIDO process. One of its objectives is to share best practice and alternative VCM production process information with identification of possible technical alternatives to the mercury-based catalytic approach, including life cycle and economic considerations. Mr. Randall was invited by EPA's OITA to participate in this technical meeting. The goal of this meeting is to continue our collaboration in face-to-face meetings on issues of identifying ways to reduce mercury emissions during the entire VCM production process, including the catalyst handling.

NAME Tamara Tal	DESCRIPTION ILSI HESI is a non-profit organization that brings together scientists from around the world from academia, government, industry, research institutes, and NGOs to address and reach consensus on scientific questions that have the potential to be resolved through creative application of intellectual and financial resources. The Microbiome Subcommittee provides a forum where scientists can exchange information and initiate activities to advance science related to gut microbial-host dynamics to understand how the gut microbiome affects human health, drug efficacy, and xenobiotic toxicity.	LOCATION Alexandria, VA	International Life Sciences Institute (ILSI) Health and Environmental Sciences Institute (HESI) Microbiome Subcommittee	Common carrier transportation	X		$400
				Meals		X	$50
				Lodging		X	$540
				Waiver of fees		X	$300

	The workshop aims to identify data gaps that can be addressed to help determine if certain alterations in the gut microbiome have an effect on human health. This will be done through discussing current science on the gut microbiome, the current understanding on how xenobiotic toxicity affects the microbiome, and discovering potential biomarkers of disease due to alterations of microbiome structure.

NAME Charles Wood	DESCRIPTION 6th European Society of Toxicologic Pathology (ESTP) International Expert Workshop on "Adversity": focus specifically on adversity of effects in the thyroid gland, which is a common target organ for environmental chemicals and pharmaceuticals and an important focus of the U.S. EPA Endocrine Disruptor Screening Program. Topics will include mechanisms/AOPs for thyroid effects, human relevance considerations, and alternative assays and data types that may inform interpretation of thyroid effects. The official workshop title is "Adversity of thyroid follicular epithelial hypertrophy/hyperplasia, differentiation between direct and indirect mechanisms and their implication for risk assessment." The panel for this workshop is comprised of representatives from the European Union, Japan, and the US. Participants will share practical case examples to illustrate issues and proposals regarding identification and interpretation of thyroid effects. The final output of the workshop will be a report to be published in a peer-reviewed international journal.
